

Growing Sylvie, Retailer by Retailer

A partnership proposal for Sylvie Jewelry — prepared by Top Click

Ian, Gary — thank you for the time and the candour over our last two calls. This isn't a templated agency pitch. It's our honest read on where the needle actually moves for Sylvie, and exactly how we'd start: small, proven, and hands-on.

The theme you kept coming back to is the one that matters: you don't need another partner with great ideas you then have to execute yourselves. You need a partner who does the work. That is what this document is about.

1. The goal

You said it best: the real game-changer isn't ranking Sylvie for “engagement rings.” It's becoming indispensable to your retailers — the way Gabriel & Co. did on their way to 1,500+ stores. If Sylvie can help a jeweler bring customers through their door, that jeweler never leaves, and the ones down the road want in too.

Grow Sylvie from ~400 retailers to 800 — by being the supplier that also brings shoppers into each retailer's store.

Everything below serves that one outcome.

2. The opportunity we see

Two things stood out when we looked under the hood.

- You already have real authority — it's just aimed at the wrong targets. Sylvie sits at a Domain Rating of 50 (Ahrefs) / Authority Score 41 (SEMrush). That's genuinely strong. But much of it is spent on informational traffic (“stones for July born” — 40,000 searches a month that don't sell a ring) and on head terms the pure-B2C players own and a B2B brand structurally can't win. We don't need to build authority from scratch — we need to redeploy the authority you already have toward terms that map to your business.
- Your retailer landing pages are a hidden asset. You already have a page per retailer location. Some rank on page one today (Des Moines). They're simply under-optimised — so the fastest wins require improving what exists, not building anything new.

3. The plan — two engines

Engine 1 — Retailer enablement (make Sylvie indispensable). Help each retailer sell locally: optimise their Sylvie landing page to rank for the local “engagement rings [city]” searches, then extend to their own Google Business Profile and local SEO, then drive walk-ins. In your words — we become their agency as well as their supplier.

Engine 2 — Retailer acquisition (get from 400 to 800). Reach jeweler owners directly and sign new accounts — using your target-jeweler list to build custom audiences on Meta and LinkedIn — plus consumer demand that makes jewelers want to carry the line. The jewelry world may be a handshake industry, but every owner is still findable online.

The exact channel mix per retailer — SEO vs local ads vs social — we won't guess at. We'll let the test phase tell us what actually moves the needle, then package the winner.

4. How we start — a low-risk test phase

You were clear, and we agree completely: nothing goes near a real retailer relationship until we've proven ourselves. A relationship you've spent years building is not something to experiment on.

So we prove the retailer model on your own pages first — same playbook, zero risk. Your Portland / Kassab Jewelers page is the perfect worked example. Here's what we found live on the call, and what we'd fix:

What we found	The fix
Page targets “engagement rings in Portland” — only ~20 searches/mo	Retarget to “engagement rings Portland” — ~400 searches/mo. 20× the demand.
The target keyword sits in an H2; the H1 is the retailer's name	Promote the keyword to the H1
No backlinks point to the Portland page	Build direct links to it
Meta description too short	Rewrite for click-through

This is the retailer enablement model in miniature — that page exists to win local searches and send walk-ins to Kassab. Prove it here, on your asset, and we've proven it everywhere.

And this phase is bigger than a few pages. Our core focus throughout is building your retail network — the road from 400 to 800 stores. We act as your full marketing partner across SEO, Google and Bing Ads, social ads and strategy, all aimed at that growth: sharpening your own site as the foundation, and beginning the acquisition groundwork — turning your jeweler list into ad-ready audiences — with us as a standing sounding board throughout.

What this phase proves: that we execute, A-to-Z, hands-on, across every channel — and that the model works — before a single retailer is involved.

5. Why we can execute where others stalled

We're a seven-person, full-time team and our whole model is doing the work, not just advising on it. Two snapshots of how we actually operate:

- A US Shopify brand. We spent 6–7 hours on keyword research, then did the work: rewrote every page title and description, fixed the H1s, renamed and compressed images, submitted and indexed sitemaps in Google and Bing, ran a backlink toxicity and gap audit, and now build links monthly through guest posts and digital PR. Authority built through the product and collection pages that actually sell — not blogs for the sake of it.
- A US trade-show display company. Was paying a US agency $30,000/month. We took it on at a fraction of that and tripled their traffic.

That cost advantage is real and it's yours to use: a full South-African team delivers what a US agency charges multiples for. You already sensed this — it's exactly why the model works.

6. The rollout, once we've earned it

Phase 2 — one friendly retailer. We take the proven playbook to a single willing retailer, help with their own site and Google Business Profile, and show walk-in traffic. Funded the smart way: from existing co-op dollars — the ~5% marketing pot they already accrue with you — a small matched contribution, and a modest direct fee. No new budget required to start.

Phase 3 — scale. We productise the proven package and roll it across the retailer base: a standardised, co-op-fundable local-marketing offering that makes Sylvie indispensable to all 400, and a magnet for the next 400. Acquisition runs continuously alongside.

7. Commercials

Two separate conversations, deliberately — each an all-in package, not a line-item menu:

Package	What's included	Investment
Building Sylvie's retail network	Our core focus: growing you from ~400 retailers to 800. A single monthly retainer, full-service across every channel — SEO, Google Ads and Bing Ads, social ads, and strategy — covering both the drive to acquire new retailers and the optimisation of your own site and landing pages that powers it. Plus your standing sounding board, advisor and partner. Month to month, no long lock-in.	$3,500 / month
Per-retailer package (Phase 2+)	Once we roll out to your stores: a complete local-marketing package for each retailer — local SEO, Google Ads and Bing Ads, social ads, and ongoing advice — designed to be largely covered by existing co-op dollars. Small per store, meaningful across hundreds.	$500 / store / month

We don't bill for “a few hours of ideas a month.” This is a full-service partnership — work shipped and outcomes moved across every channel that matters.

8. Content — closing the gap that stalled you

The thing that broke the last relationship was execution on copy — you couldn't find or manage writers. We'll close that gap for you: during the test phase we source and manage a writer (a strong full-time option runs ~R25,000/month, billed transparently at cost), so pages actually ship in your voice. Once it's humming, you keep them via us or bring them in-house — your call. You get one point of accountability, not another hiring project.

9. Next steps

1. You give this a read and tell us if the direction feels right.
2. We agree the scope and start on your own retailer pages — Portland first.
3. We introduce a writer to close the content gap.
4. We share the LinkedIn / owner-targeting outline for acquisition.

Small start, real work, fast proof — then we scale it together.
